Brian, I thought of you today. I only knew you for a couple months, but I still look back on that time so fondly. You were one of my first friends at Gonzaga. I wish you could have walked with us at graduation. I wish we could have shared more memories. Because even after four years of building my life at school, the gap you left in my heart never closed. I miss you, Brian. But I take trust in knowing you're still here, in the hearts of the people that love you.

Today is Dia de los Muertos, for thousands of years in my culture we have remembered those we have loved during the first two days of November. A year ago, we were living together. A trinary star system. Teaching each other Spanglish and eavesdropping on our apartment neighbors, laughing. Words can not capture how much I miss you, Hermano. You are a brother to me. Today we make art and an altar in honor of you, Amigo Mejor, Hermano. Infinite.
